On a cold day spotted by snow showers, Lizzy Abitbul surveys the selection at Karen Allen Fiber Arts, where Sonia Mackintosh's distinctive scarves will soon be available.

From basement to small business: Locally made scarves offer fashion, function and fun

By Jeremy D. Goodwin

SHEFFIELD—As temperatures drop and the New Year wastes little time in bringing with it a healthy helping of snowfall, one clothing accessory goes beyond style to provide some well-needed protection from the cold.

That's right, it's scarf weather.

Whether wrapped around one's head to create a mummified look or worn casually as a fashion statement, scarves are versatile pieces of clothing that certainly are much appreciated this time of year.

One local designer has already seen her scarf business grow by leaps and bounds over the past decade, and her work is now even more readily available in South County.

The scarves of Sonya Mackintosh's smArtworks, Inc. are now available at Karen Allen's Fiber Arts on Railroad Street in Great Barrington, and will be featured at the Guido's Fresh Marketplace location in the same town beginning on January 11.

Not your typical scarves, they wrap snugly around the line between function and artistic statement. They also represent a home grown business that has grown from a one-person basement endeavor to a local small business employer.

They enable their wearers to "[E]xpress their own individuality and satisfy a need for style and comfort," says Lizzy Abitbul, of smArtworks, Inc.

Sonya Mackintosh started running the venture out of her basement in Ghent, New York in 1994. It was conceived and launched purely to make her vision for these very individual scarves come to life. She gave herself this venue to design, produce and sell these handloomed items, and she trekked around to local craft shows to spread the word.

The business grew enough for Mackintosh to move to an old warehouse building and stock it with ten knitting machines and a large yarn and thread inventory. She upgraded in 2002 to a larger facility in Sheffield where she employs a staff of nine.

Mackintosh works with cotton and with wool, and her website displays about a dozen different, starkly original designs.

Bearing names like "eyelet," "small cacti," "staircase," and "kelp," they each make an individual statement. Many integrate multiple colors, and each takes a different shape and overall appearance. To the line of scarves she also adds offerings like a boa wrap and a full stole.

She describes her work as "nubby and uniquely three dimensional," and says that examples of her pieces can be found in fine art galleries and boutiques as well as craft shows.

Some of the more elaborate pieces seem capable of discouraging an owner from wearing them out in the wet elements and musing them even a bit—however, they are surely a lot more handy for keeping warm in a Berkshire blizzard than the most accomplished of oil paintings.
